Conference Overview

Have you ever felt overwhelmed by the duties of your job, or thought that the resources you have been provided with are not sufficient to have a significant impact on the diversity efforts of your institution? The major issue for most professionals is pulling it all together to ensure that your actions are effective and yield positive results. Diversity, Multiculturalism, Access and Equity, and other term variations promoting inclusion and achievement are often referenced in our strategic plans and campus initiatives. While using these terms gives the notion that an institution is forward thinking, further examination reveals the uncertainty of how to accomplish specific goals relative to the advancement of minority students, faculty and staff. Make plans to attend this conference to learn how you can make a difference and blaze a trail for others to follow!

Access and Equity: Empowering Professionals to Make a Difference, is the theme for the 2007 conference sponsored by the South Carolina Association for Access and Equity and the Commission on Higher Education. As in years past, conference sessions have focused on successful access and equity programs and strategies that encourage all institutional constituencies to move forward in ensuring a solid educational environment that is culturally rich and conducive to learning and creative interaction among students, faculty, and staff. This year, we have decided to include a pre-conference workshop entitled, “Leader of a One Man Band.” This workshop will emphasize best practices and approaches for multicultural professionals in one-person offices. In addition, conference workshop topics will cover educational opportunities for professionals, updates on racial and ethnicity guidelines, and provide an opportunity for dialogue among conference attendees and an exceptional group of speakers and presenters that will be enlightening, inspiring and educational.
